In high school, he and his friends drove from their town to run 5 or 6 miles through the mountains, then pedaled back to school. Today, Jones cycles 10 miles through the streets of Manhattan every day. He owns a few clothing brands and produces documentaries and music videos. He occasionally races, and in 2016, he competed in the Hawaii Ironman Triathlon. “I thought I had the endurance,” he said. “It turns out I was really unprepared for the heat.” Jones credits his faith and his father, a pastor, as being key to his resilience. “It made me realize why I had this kind of athletic career,” he said. The present invention relates to a method for producing a semiconductor device, and more particularly to a method for producing a semiconductor device which can suppress degradation of the quality of a semiconductor substrate due to defects or the like. In the case of producing a semiconductor device such as a semiconductor laser (LD), a superconductor device or a magnetic head, it is known that a silicon (Si) substrate is used. Then, a silicon substrate is cut and divided into a plurality of chips, and each of the chips is sealed with an epoxy resin. Recently, there have been demanded not only reduction of the size of a semiconductor substrate but also reduction of the size of a semiconductor device. However, when a semiconductor device is reduced in size, the yield of a semiconductor device decreases. Particularly, a size reduction of a semiconductor laser has been more demanded than those of other semiconductor devices, and thus reduction of the size of the semiconductor device has become more important. Therefore, it is important to improve the yield of a semiconductor substrate. The method for producing a semiconductor device which has been employed conventionally is explained by referring to FIGS. 2 to 4. First, as shown in FIG. 2, a silicon substrate 51 having a size of,
