field of the separation of fluids, and more particularly to a screen through which fluids can be separated by a process of filtration. It is well known that the filtration of fluids by the use of fibrous filter screens can be used to separate particulate matter from fluids. Typically, the screen can be a unitary structure made of some type of perforated material which can comprise any of a variety of materials. The perforations tend to be sized and distributed in accordance with the desired performance characteristics of the filter. It is also well known that the mechanical integrity of many screen designs deteriorates as the filter is used over a prolonged period of time. Consequently, these screens must be periodically cleaned or replaced. Depending on the screen material used, the cleaning may consist of the disposal of a waste sludge. Alternatively, the cleaning can consist of a process of liquid rinsing. Such rinsing can have many causes, including perforations being plugged with fine particulate matter or other debris, and can also result in the re-suspension of the particles. In addition to the effect on performance, screen material degradation can result in the unanticipated loss of fluid flow through the screen as the perforations become enlarged or otherwise altered. This loss of flow may be caused by the growth of bacillary c6a93da74d
