Wednesday, February 15, 2006 I'm not sure how I can say this in a sound way, it may be too disturbing to hear, I'm not exactly sure how to say it. If you've been following my blogs here or on the other one, you know that a family member of mine has been born with a condition that no one would ever see in a normal life. After being in intensive care for almost a month now, at 1 month old, her condition has completely changed and she's no longer in intensive care. She's actually doing very well and has stopped crying lately. I won't tell you the details of what's happened to my sister because I don't want to disturb her with those details at all. The role of the incisional complication rate in reducing the risk of infection. The clinical effects of increasing the incisional complication rate due to deep surgical wounds is questioned. Among 60,000 children seen annually in our clinic, the 2 year incidence of any deep wound infection (superficial, deep or organ-space) following clean surgery was 0.07% for infants, 0.17% for children and 0.2% for adolescents. This compares to a reported incisional complication rate of 0.55% for clean surgery in infants, 3.8% for clean surgery in children and 1.6% for clean surgery in adolescents. That rate of incisional complication is at least 10-fold higher than in this population. Deep surgical wound infections occurring after clean surgery have their own risk factors and these are likely to be much more than the 0.2% occurring in a clean population. Deep incisional infection rates following clean surgery are probably significantly higher than reported in any other population. Tennessee guard Josh Smith has committed to transfer to Baylor and is set to join the Bears on Dec. 31, according to sources. Smith, who is back in the state of Texas, is a native of Katy, Texas. Smith, a 6-foot-6 point guard who spent his freshman season at Kansas, had completed a visit to Memphis before making the commitment to Baylor. He committed on Nov. 17. Smith averaged just 4.1 points and 3.5 assists per game with the Jayhawks. After not playing in a Jayhawks game on March 6, Smith suffered a knee injury that required surgery and sidelined him the remainder of the season. Baylor coach Scott Drew has been on the recruiting trail since the season-ending injuries of guards Phil Forte and Pierre Jackson in September. The Bears signed two transfers from West Virginia (power forward
