We report a case of a patient with a diagnosis of fibromyalgia who was treated with risperidone. The patient was assessed using the Fibromyalgia Impact Questionnaire and PainDETECT Questionnaire. Risperidone was added to the medication of the patient with a diagnosis of fibromyalgia. In the follow-up, a significant decrease in both questionnaires scores was noted after the addition of risperidone. It is suggested that the improvement in the Fibromyalgia Impact Questionnaire and PainDETECT Questionnaire may be due to the effect of risperidone on mood, cognitive impairment, sleep quality, or analgesic effects.An investigation of the abscopal effect in an experimental head and neck cancer model. The abscopal effect, also known as the 'invisible effect', is a rare phenomenon by which the regression of a tumor outside the irradiated field has been observed in the presence of irradiation. Most abscopal effects described in the literature involve the regression of a single metastatic site outside the irradiated field. The purpose of this study was to demonstrate the possibility of inducing the abscopal effect in head and neck cancer, using an experimental model. We investigated the effect of irradiation on head and neck tumor growth. A total of 48 mice received a single dose of 8Gy to the right lower neck area. After this, the mice were classified into three groups: (A) 0 Gy, (B) 15 Gy, and (C) 30 Gy. Mice in groups B and C received the 15 Gy or 30 Gy to the right lower neck area and another 15 Gy to the right shoulder area. In group A, there was no irradiation. Tumor volume was measured on days 1, 3, 7, 14, and 28. On day 28, blood samples were collected from the right atrium of each mouse, which was then sacrificed for histological analysis. No tumor was found on day 1 in the right shoulder area of the mice in group C. However, on days 3
