Influence of ethanol in rat-conditioned media on the growth of SV40-transformed MRC-5 cells. Rat-conditioned media enhanced the growth of SV40-transformed MRC-5 fibroblasts in vitro. The addition of ethanol to the conditioned media had an inhibitory effect on their growth-promoting activity. Low concentrations of ethanol (1%) did not interfere with the effect, while higher concentrations (10%) completely abolished the activity. The inhibitory effect was observed immediately after adding ethanol to the conditioned media. The inhibitory activity depended on the presence of fetal calf serum and of TGF-beta in the medium. The results suggest that ethanol may interfere with the active factors present in the conditioned medium and play a role in the regulation of cell growth in vivo.

Functional assessment of visual system in patients with juvenile idiopathic arthritis. To evaluate the presence of peripheral and central visual abnormalities in patients with juvenile idiopathic arthritis (JIA). The visual system was evaluated in 65 patients with JIA (37 with polyarticular course, 26 with rheumatoid factor-positive polyarthritis, and 12 with persistent oligoarthritis). Systemic examination was performed, and bilateral static (functional) and kinetic perimetry and color and motion visual evoked potentials were recorded.
